using archival material and oral testimony collected during workshops in nunavut between 1996 and 2008 frédéric laugrand and jarich oosten provide a nuanced look at inuit religion offering a strong counter narrative to the idea that traditional inuit culture declined post contact they show that setting up a dichotomy between a past identified with traditional culture and a present involving christianity obscures the continuity and dynamics of inuit society which has long borrowed and adapted outside elements they argue that both shamanism and christianity are continually changing in the arctic and ideas of transformation and transition are necessary to understand both how the ideology of a hunting society shaped inuit christian cosmology and how christianity changed inuit shamanic traditions the interaction of 19th century russian missionaries with three indigenous groups the chukchi and altaians in siberia and the dena ina indians in alaska resulted in widely different outcomes the chukchi disregarded the missionary message the dena ina embraced christianity and the altaians responded by selectively borrowing from orthodox religion znamenski in the first work of its kind in english argues that the relationships between indigenous shamanism and orthodox missionaries in siberia and alaska were essentially a dialogue about spiritual political and ideological power and challenges both the widespread conviction that christian missionaries always acted as agents of colonial oppression among tribal peoples and the notion that native peoples maintained their pristine traditional cultures despite years of interaction with western society znamenski asserts that russian missionary policy toward indigenous peoples was at best ambivalent and cannot be described as either russification or a broad tolerance of native cultures after two broad introductory chapters he deals with each indigenous people in a separate section illustrating the ways in which native siberians and alaskans acted as active players welcoming adopting rejecting or reinterpreting elements of christianity depending upon surrounding circumstances and individual cultural stances
